Applinet Announces New Partnership with VADition

Applinet plc and VADition have joined forces to create a new business partnership which will drive the Isilon IQ Network Storage product to market. The alliance enables Applinet to offer niche technologies from new vendors entering the UK market.

"Partnering with VADition gives Applinet the confidence that the products have undergone a thorough selection process, both with regard to suitability and market demand", Ian Morris, Co-Founder of VADition.

"With the evolution of the converged solution and integrating voice, data and applications from one provider there is a natural requirement to provide the skills and knowledge in providing a strong storage solution. The proposition needs to be leading it's field, simplistic to implement, uncomplicated to support and most of all expandable without the need to plan any downtime. The Isilon portfolio combined with our convergence pedigree gives our clients this opportunity. In conjunction with the support of VADition, we see the partnership as paramount to increasing our Storage Area Networking abilities" adds Darren Boyce, Managing Director, Applinet plc.

The Isilon IQ Intelligent Clustered Storage System is unlike any other storage product on the market today. It does not work in the same way as NAS or SAN systems, and works on the principle of storing actual files rather than databases and emails. Each Isilon IQ node consists of a powerful storage server, disk capacity, memory, CPU and network connectivity. Additional nodes can be introduced to form a cluster and as each node is added, the faster the cluster works as a collective power.

"With Isilon pioneering the clustered storage industry and VADition providing a channel to enterprise businesses in Europe, we at Applinet look forward to being in the top-notch pool of talent and partners to assist Isilon in executing its global vision" concludes Darren.
